

Karl Lagerfeld, the legendary fashion designer known for his innovative creations and distinctive personal style, passed away on February 19, 2019, at the age of 85. His death occurred in Paris, a city that served as both his home and the heart of the fashion world. Lagerfeld's influence on the industry was monumental, having held creative director positions at iconic brands such as Chanel, Fendi, and his own eponymous label.

Lagerfeld's funeral was a grand affair, reflecting his status within the fashion community. It took place at the historic Église de la Madeleine in Paris on February 22, 2019. The service was attended by numerous high-profile figures, including celebrities and fellow designers. Notable attendees included Anna Wintour, Donatella Versace, and Cara Delevingne, all of whom came to pay their respects to a man who had shaped modern fashion.

The Karl Lagerfeld brand, established in 1984, has seen significant growth over the years. As of recent reports, the company employs around 300 individuals across various roles, from design to retail. The brand's revenue has been estimated at over €200 million annually, showcasing its prominence in the luxury market.

Karl Lagerfeld's designs are available in renowned outlets worldwide, including flagship stores in major cities like Paris, New York, Tokyo, and Milan. High-end department stores such as Saks Fifth Avenue, Harrods, and Galeries Lafayette also carry his collections, making his work accessible to fashion enthusiasts globally.

Lagerfeld's legacy continues to inspire new generations of designers and fashion lovers, ensuring that his impact on the industry will be felt for years to come.